How to Simplify Training Districtwide

Save Time, Money, & Improve Efficiency with a Custom Training System

Every day 480,000 school bus drivers across the United States carry 26 million students more than 340 million miles. These drivers play a truly critical role in the lives and development of each student getting on and off the bus. While the driver's number one job is to get students to and from school safely, their job involves more than just learning the rules of the road.

Problem Prevention is Possible

Ask anyone managing a bus barn, and they will tell you their lives would be easier if they didn't have to manage parent complaints, solve avoidable problems, and respond to accidents that could have easily been prevented. Fixing these issues starts with initial and ongoing training of bus drivers in multiple areas. Doing so leads to better operating efficiency and improved safety.

Why Would You Put Students at Risk?

Nationally, an average of 18 children die in school transportation related crashes each year. That means 18 families each year have to say goodbye to a child they trusted a school system would return to them when they put their child on the bus. That means 18 bus drivers a year will wake up each day for the rest of their lives wishing they would have done something different on the day they had their crash.

Ongoing training is essential to keeping school bus drivers interested, motivated, and engaged in how to manage children on the bus. Additionally, a good training program keeps drivers abreast of changes in legislation and continually provides them with reminders of the best practices for providing safety. Even if money is tight, investing in quality initial and ongoing training for your school bus drivers is worth every dime. Research has shown investing in good training leads to increased productivity, reduced driver turnover, and decreased need for supervision.

Could Your Drivers Make You Liable?

How confident are you that your school bus drivers are able to handle situations involving bullying, theft, or sexual harassment that happen every single day on school busses across the nation? What would your driver do if a child suffered a seizure or went into diabetic shock while on the bus? Can your drivers recognize the signs of child abuse? If you're not 100% sure your drivers are up-to-date on how to answer these situations, you need a simple, user friendly training program for them to utilize.

Save Money Lost on Poor Decisions

With the annual maintenance and fuel cost to run just one bus averaging around $50,000 a year, it is no wonder school districts across the nation are looking for ways to improve operating efficiency. Training is the number one way to accomplish this goal. Your school bus drivers should be going through regular training on proper maintenance and upkeep of their bus.

Often overlooked in training, but equally as important, is the overall safety of the actual school bus driver. Knowing how to properly lift, prevent falls, and prevent injuries will ensure your drivers are kept healthy, and it will decrease your number of worker's compensation claims. Additionally, your drivers need ongoing training in what to do if a student brings a weapon or drugs onto the bus. Proper training can save the lives of children and school bus drivers.

Training for the Entire District

The Infnit-I Workforce System was designed with the school bus driver in mind, but the 350+ videos currently in the library also apply to many departments across the school district. Plus, your own custom content and modules can be added to the system, making the Learning Management System a one-stop training portal for your entire school district.

School districts across the country have found great success utilizing our unique, ongoing training program to not only improve the efficiency of their school bus fleet, but more importantly, to also train their entire district and provide the safest environment for their students.
